BLACK AND WHITE

Etchers and Etchings —Monday Evening's Lecture

The lecture by Mr French was poorly attended This was occasioned by an unfortunate misunderstanding as to the date of the lecture Those who were present join with many who were not there in hoping that this lecture will be delivered again at an early date. The lecturer gave a sympathetic analysis of what etching is its relation to the artist and to nature He pointed out the difference between the etching and the engraving and drew the distinction between the etchers who copy from the works of others and those who etch their own drawings At the close of the lecture these points were brought out more fully in reply to questions asked by the audience The history of etchings and etchers was given in a very pleasing manner and the points made in the address were illustrated by many fine etchings which were exhibited The descriptions of Rembrandt's works and of Dr Hadyn, the great English etcher were very full and marked by quiet eloquence

In his remarks on the American etchers Mr Parrish displayed great fairness in speaking of his fellow artists In fact one serious omission was the necessary omission of his own name and works

We understand that Mr Parrish is a comparative novice on the lecture platform but he speaks with all the grace and ease of a veteran It is hard to reproduce and report the scraps of personal reminiscence the quiet humor, and the eloquence of the lecture

Mr Parrish has betrayed himself and we hope to hear him again on this and kindred themes

WOMAN'S EXCHANGE.

What this Useful Organization is Now Doing

How Women are Enabled to Support Themselves

Success of the Exchange Established in this City

The Class of People Which it is Designed to Benefit.

The removal of the Woman's exchange from its old quarters on Huerfano street to the commodious building on the northwest corner of Weber street and Pike's Peak avenue will greatly facilitate the workings of the exchange and at the same time promote its usefulness Although the organization has only been in operation in this city for a comparatively short time it has been placed on a permanent basis and its future success is already assured

A visit to the rooms of the exchange is sure to convince one of the fact that it is doing a great amount of good to the women of this city who are desirous of earning their own living and in some instances supporting themselves and families The organization is not a charitable one in any sense It is only the medium through which women can support and aid themselves It encourages the development of the principles of self help and through its instrumentality many women in this city and other cities are placed in positions of comparative independence and are enabled to keep themselves and families in a comfortable manner

The local organization has now quite a list of consignors, and the number of purchasers is daily increasing The method of its operation is briefly as follows Persons who desire to consign articles to the exchange for the purpose of selling them, purchase what is known as a consignor's ticket which entitles them to this privilege. A price is placed on the article so consigned and when sold the exchange receives ten per cent of the purchase price

The articles which it has now for sale include all kinds of fancy work and embroidery, hand painted Easter and dinner cards, crayon portraits etchings books of wild flowers water color sketches and in fact all varieties of art work

But the effort of the exchange is not entirely directed to the sale of fancy articles There are many women who have not the ability to contribute articles of the above named character These women have an opportunity—and many have availed themselves of it to contribute useful things in the way of household supplies etc. One woman is supporting herself and child from the proceeds of the sale of bread which she furnishes to the exchange. Another is earning her living by the sale of her cakes Others contribute all kinds of sauces jellies, etc , etc , which meet with ready sale

One of the principal features of the exchange is the lunch room, which is conducted in connection with the other department. In its present quarters it is enabled to furnish excellent table board for a moderate sum It already has quite a number of table boarders It has several large and comfortably furnished rooms provided with hot and cold water and gas to rent The occupants of these rooms can procure their meals at the exchange or elsewhere if they desire

The exchange is prepared to fill orders for fancy work and embroidery, to put up lunches for picnics parties etc and to provide food for the sick in the way of beef tea, bouillon wine jelly etc etc It is open from 7 a m to 8 p m

A case of small pox was yesterday brought to the notice of the city authorities who took immediate steps to prevent the contagious malady from spreading On Monday evening a man who is a carriage painter by trade and who has been employed in the city for the past six weeks came to the office of Dr J R Wilcox and requested him to prescribe for him He told the physician that he had experienced violent headaches and that eruptions had broken out in various places on his body Dr Wilcox stated that he would examine his case more thoroughly yesterday morning Yesterday the doctor discovered that he had all the symptoms of small pox Drs Kimball and Spicer were immediately consulted and the three physicians were not long in determining that the man was suffering from a very pronounced form of varioloid City Physician Kimball gave orders that the man should be kept in the room where the consultation was held until he could be removed to a building outside the resident portion of the city Carpenters were immediately put to work to build a pest house in one of the gulches north of the mesa road The building will be completed as soon as possible A tent was pitched in that locality yesterday afternoon and the sick man was removed to it A nurse was secured for him and he was made as comfortable as the exigencies of his case would permit It is not thought that there is any danger of the dread disease spreading though on Monday night the man slept in a room which was divided by a very thin partition from a room in which eight men were sleeping

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

HOW OUR CHIEF EXECUTIVE WILL LOOK ON HIS 51ST BIRTHDAY

His Wonderful Health and His Power of Throwing Off Worry—His Peculiarities—His Daily Life in the White House—How He Receives His Callers.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, March 15.

PRESIDENT Cleveland will be 51 years old next Sunday. His health is perfect ... his three years of presidential work and worry have left ... no wrinkles ... turned his thin brown hair to gray. He is perhaps a trifle more bald over the forehead ... people a little more like him but there are more pleasant lines in his face now than there were then, and all in all he is a younger man. White House cares have made no impression on him, and his long tenure ... the attacks which sent Gen. Harrison into a delirium ... and from which he finally died. These same cares dragged old Zach Taylor to his grave and they induced President Polk to say, within two months after he became president, that he would not accept the position again if it were offered to him on a silver plate. Three years have changed his tone, however, and he is not as ardent a candidate as ever ... a wire.

President Cleveland's health in the White House is due to his power of throwing off worry. He decides matters as they come before him, and devotes his mind to the thing at hand. This through, he thinks no more about it, and throws himself into the next duty that lies nearest him. He does not carry his work out of his office ... and awakes as fresh as a daisy every morning. He has an almost perfect constitution. Indigestion does not trouble him, and the acid of dyspepsia never produces sarcasm or irony in his conversation. He is not a fretful man, though at times he may be an angry one, and he has learned the lesson of doing the best he can with the present and letting the future take care of itself.

President Cleveland in addition to his power of throwing off worry has taken more exercise since his marriage. He drives oftener into the country, and he has within the past few weeks been taking walks about Washington. He is a good eater, and notwithstanding his frame

CLEVELAND AND THE LAMONT CHILDREN.

... everyone, he has a springing step ... him striding up Pennsylvania ... with Secretary of the Interior ... Lamar ... pedestrian qualities ... president keeps even with his, ... the two been younger men, they ... have been called jaunty.

The president has not been taking the ... rides that the papers have been ... He is too heavy to sit a horse, ... though there is a good saddle ... at the White House ... During his ... his chief ... may frequently be seen ... a little walk about the White ... grounds. Sometimes Mrs. Cleveland ... with him, and just now when the ... are beginning to peep through ... she and Hector, of the mastiff ... take a stroll at the back of the ... mansion. The other day ... little girls walked about ... and the crowd passed through ... which lead from the war department ... of the treasury giving her ... than a passing glance. Our ... in ways than the queens of ... is no ruler's house in ... which is so easy of access as ... President Cleveland's ... to all the world, and the ... American citizen can get into ... between 9 and 12 every ... days of the week he may ... the hall of the president ... and the president will have ... a private audience.

But let us go back to the president's breakfast ... the White House chef can furnish ... In the winter he ... makes his stomach ... than he ... after he leaves the table ... before he goes to his work. He begins at ... writes himself. He is a good penman, and his letters are regular. His hand is an old fashioned one, and in making his autograph he usually finishes it with a slight ... autograph ... yesterday a ... with quotations from the ... written his name. He writes steadily ... o'clock, and at this time he is ready to receive callers. I have sat in his room and watched him while he was shaking hands with stiff sinews and office seekers. The crowd is let in by ... and its members take their seats on the red cushioned chairs around the White House ... The president stands up near his desk and the ... with a shake of the hand ... to which the man has to say, and a careful reader of physiognomy can tell something of the ... His mind as he does so. He answers questions promptly, and he has learned how to say "No" and to say it not ungracefully. Sometimes he leaves his desk and walks about the room shaking hands with each man in turn and talking with him as he goes around. Many of his callers come to pay their respects, some to ask for offices, others to complain and some to compliment. The president deals with each caller as he comes up, and either settles the case or tells him he will consider it.

SECRETARY VILAS AND MR. CLEVELAND.

By the time he is through with these matters it is time for him to receive the hundreds who have come to pay their respects, and he goes down to the East room. The callers have been marshaled in line. The president stands near the door of the great corridor, and beside him is a sharp eyed doorkeeper, who notes each caller very carefully as he comes up, hears his name and introduces him to the president. The president does this hand shaking rather mechanically. He says, "How do you do?" to each caller, and he says it so often that the words have become somewhat stereotyped. Some of the callers evidently want to leave an impression upon him, and they ask a question, pay a compliment, or make what they think a happy remark. At times the president answers these, and he is always courteous to ladies. He draws the line on babies, however, and while he is willing to say that each woman's baby is the prettiest in the world, he does not like to be asked to kiss them. It is a big thing for a young man to be told that in his babyhood he kissed a president, but did the president kiss all the babies that are thus presented to him his mustache would be worn to a frazzle, and his lips would be no thicker than paper.

The next thing on the president's programme is his lunch. This consists of a light meal and is often made up of bread and butter, cold meats, a little fruit and a cup of tea. It is eaten in the private dining room ... to his office ... bread. He ... from the ... talking to Chief Justice Waite ... Sheridan ... man of the Democratic ... committee of some western state ... 4 o'clock ... drive. Mrs. Cleveland ... him, and the stiff backed drab coated, black faced Albert makes a handsome figure as he holds the reins and whips up the seal browns. The president has his dinner at about 7 o'clock. He does not appear at this meal in swallow tail and white necktie, unless he has guests present who will appear in evening dress. He has a good dinner, and it is served in courses. Wine is used only when guests are present who are accustomed to have wine at their meals. The president does not sit long at the table when alone, and after his dinner is over he goes to the second story of the White House and smokes a cigar. He seldom smokes in his office, and the only smoke of the day is this cigar after dinner. He is not an extravagant man in any way. He is not a high liver, and he has a good healthy mind.

He likes the theatre and the opera, and prefers comedy, I am told, to tragedy. He is said to be a great friend of the two comedians Robson and Crane, and I don't imagine that he would be averse to a good minstrel show if it were not derogatory to presidential dignity. Mrs. Cleveland is very fond of music, and she likes German songs very much. When Miss Agnes Huntington, the famous contralto of the Boston Ideals, was here a week or so ago, she was entertained at the White House, where she sang several pretty German songs for Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland attended the opera the night she appeared as Fatinitza. The president always has a box when he attends the theatre, and he and Mrs. Cleveland set a good example to theatre goers. They do not whisper, talk loud or endeavor to attract attention to themselves as do some other box owners, and Mrs. Cleveland is always interested in good acting and good singing. The president is so busy, however, that he is often unable to accompany Mrs. Cleveland when she wishes to go to the theatre. He does a great deal of work in the evenings, and many a night President Cleveland and Col. Lamont sit in this White House library working away after the other officials of the government have gone to bed.

President Cleveland has gained a great deal from the trips he has taken during the past few years. He is a good traveler, and he has never ... rounded with that ... that doth hedge a king. He can travel rapidly, absorbs ... and can make himself easy in a palace car. During the trip to Florida the president entered heartily into the different celebrations. He did not stand upon his dignity when one young fellow cried out, "We're sorry you're going away, Grover!" and he has nothing of the snobbishness which pertains to some great men about him.

This birthday should surely be a happy one, though the great questions which have been brought before the people by his message may or may not be settled by his re-election. He is certain of the compliment of a renomination. He believes that the theory he has advanced as to the Democratic policy is the correct one, and his birthday in 1889 will tell whether or not he is right.

General Sheridan is writing an autobiography He is said to have retained all the official reports that he made during the war. Next to the 'Memoirs' of Grant and Sherman, this will arouse more interest than any war book yet published

Remember the meeting of the board of trade this evening to consider the sewerage question It is desirable that all sides of this question should be thoroughly and candidly considered We understand that there will also be a report from the committee on right of way of the Rock Island road into the city

Our interview with the agent of the Denver, Texas and Fort Worth road in Friday's paper, was suggestive of the immense value this road will be to this state The celebration which is taking place in Denver ought to be a success since the cause is one which promises so much prosperity to this state Since the Kansas Pacific finished its line into Denver, no connection outside of the state has promised us so much of real benefit

We are pleased to observe that the owners of property lying east of Shook's run have decided to extend Platte avenue through their property, and to give it a wider street its proper width The site of this city is so admirably adapted for [illegible] extensions that there [illegible] why its beauty in this respect should not be preserved We hope that the public spirited [illegible] by the owners of [illegible] of the addition in that locality will be followed by the owners of [illegible] the city.

[illegible] of General Badeau against [illegible] is now well under way Mrs. Grant's reply to Badeau's complaint is already filed The complaint is one of the [illegible] ridiculous ones ever submitted to an intelligent court. General Badeau claims that he does this for the purpose of clearing General Grant's memory, and yet if General Badeau's complaint is true General Grant should not have the credit of his book, and stands convicted as a literary impostor in publishing his memoirs as his own Badeau claims that Grant could not have written this book without him He claims that he corrected grammatical [illegible] that he reconstructed sentences and planned the book The most [illegible] reader and critic will not believe these statements In the first place, the style of the composition in this book is absolutely preferable to the style of Badeau's book called 'The Military Life of General Grant.' It is simpler more perspicuous and far more accurate in use of terms than his own book It is also much more interesting The most ridiculous claim is that he, Badeau, undertakes the suit to clear the memory of General Grant and that he undertakes it because he loved him From his own showing there was no service that he rendered General Grant which a friend would not render to another friend that he loved The only moral claim which he presents that has any appearance of justice is that General Grant confided to him the privilege of writing his military history and that the publication of these Memoirs injured the sale of his book If the fact were true that Grant did give him this privilege, and if it were also true that the publication of these Memoirs hurt the sale of his Military History then the claim would be a fairly just one, though a claim that no friend would present against the estate of a friend It is doubtful if the former is true but it is absolutely certain that the latter is not true Badeau began the publication of the military history of Grant some time in the sixties The book never would have been noticed had it not been for its subject and the sanction of the great soldier It was unmercifully criticized when it appeared and has long since been forgotten It was not regarded as a reliable or valuable book His claim for damages is therefore preposterous and his present suit can be considered as nothing less than the most outrageous blackmail in which he has attempted at the expense of the good name of his friend to rob his friend's widow Badeau has long been known as a literary humbug contemptible snob and as of inordinate vanity but this is the first time that he has appeared as a blackmailer
